Relations of England and Germany. There seems no question that the relations between Germany and Great Britain have by the Transvaal incident been strained to a serious point, and that the most threatening war-cloud hangs over Europe it has known for years. Whether that cloud will burst it is, of course, sible to say, but there are many reasons for expecting such a possibility that have not entered into the complirations producing other European warscares of recent date. The chief among these reasons is found in the temper of the two parties to the quarrel. Both nations are evidently in the humor for fighting. The provocation, or, as it is termed in England, "insult," given Great Deltain by Germany is not of a nature that can easily be smoothed over or explained by diplomacy, and the manner in which Great Britain has resented the "insult" is equally pointed. Emperor William's telegram of congratulation to Kruger has stirred British blood to fever heat, and the German people are said to be almost a unit in endorsing the Emperor's action, and to be fully aroused to the necessity of calling a halt to British aggression. The German Emperor has had frequent conferences with representatives of the Boer Government, to whom he renew-

The conclusion therefore is that it was written, so to speak, with premeditation, and summarized a policy touching British rapacity in the direction of territorial expansion at large, that the Enperor had been simply waiting a favorable opportunity to proclaim. Indeed, ments of the German press on the Emperor's stand practically admit that suzerainty-secured under the convention

The situation thus presented is consequently one that it is hard to see the way out of, except through a fight, a backdown by one or the other of the parties, or the intervention of a mutual friend, So far there is no indication of a backdown on either side, and as the other Powers seem inclined to support Germany, seeing that all of them are tired of British aggression, the prospect of emphasized. However, whether war eventuates or not, certain it is that Great Britain has not in years been so isolated as at present, and that she is receiving a most wholesome lesson in respect of the matter of land-grabbing and builying weak neighbors.

What Is Expected of the Legislature If the Dispatch is right in its belief that this Legislature does not mean to submit the question of a constitutional convention, then it may give up its hope of the passage of any reform bills—The Staunton Vindicator.

Our hopes are not great or glowing. What we maintain is this-that the opponents of a convention who are in the Legislature have put themselves in a position where they must show by their acts that there is no need of a convention, or eise they must stand discredited before the people; discredited on this It is the unfailing argument of anti-convention men that no convention is peeded to revise our Constitution because everything that a convention could do for the relief of the people this Legislature can do, or can put into shape to be done by its successor and the people. to the Constitution do you propose to submit to the next Legislature and to he people? What acts of Assembly do you propose to pass to reduce the exand improve and expedite the adminis-tration of criminal justice? Gentlemen, you have said that you could do for the people all that a convention could do; now be as good as you word.

If the Legislature disappoints the peo-ple this time, its old plea will avail it no more. Then there will be a general demand for a convention to revise and amend the work of those eminent constitution-makers-Judge Underwood, Doc-

Sensible Senators.

The members of the United States Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs have shown good sense in allowing themselves to be quoted on the question of arbitration by Mr. Henry Norman, the special correspondent of the London Chronicle. The senatorial sentiment is for arbitration; for the course proposed by this government in the Venezuela case, and rejected by Lord Salisbury, but which is likely to be forced upon Salisbury by such publications as the Chronicle is making.

The following are some of the replies:

"Senator Sherman: I am in favor of the principle of arbitration for all questions that do not involve the autonomy of either of the two countries. I hope that the two governments will agree upon such a mode of settlement for all controversies. Senator Sherman added that in his opinion Parliament should pass a resolution requiring the Ministry to take steps in this direction."

"Senator Daniel: I would regard it as a great achievement and in harmony with the aspirations of the two peoples, their mutual interests, and their closer friendship. All my mind goes forward to the halief that it would be well to create such a machinery."

verdict leads Mr. Norman to tectare:

"It is impossible to believe that British sentiment will not be moved to respond to such remarkable unanimity and such enlightened utterances. If not, then the world will see that America is ahead of England in the most striking characteristic of a civilized people."

Cleveland to Caffery.

President Cleveland's letter to Hon. Donelson Caffery strikes back boldly at those who have been so persistently charging that a secret understanding existed between the government and the General Lee's Birthday-College Matprovisional bond syndicate, and that the former was not acting in good faith in offering the $100,000,000 loan for popular subscription. It effectually disposes of those charges. Moreover, fortified as it is by Mr. Cartisle's expression of confi-dence in the success of the new loan, it ing one of the main arguments advanced in favor of the syndicate plan, and at the same time adding an element of strength to the government's credit.

Already there are indications that Mr. Cleveland's letter and Mr. Carlisle's statement are rallying the public to the support of the loan, and as the people become more and more convinced that the administration is in carnest, the disposition among them to subscribe to the bonds must increase.

Judge R. A. Pryor, in the New Supreme Court on Thursday, after refusing naturalization to about six out of eight would-be citizens, mule the following announcement:

ed his assurances of sympathy with the republic, as against British designs in South Africa, and suzerainty of the Transvaal, Salisbury has, it is reported, notified Germany that Great Britain will maintain, at all cost, her rights in that quarter—that is, her suzerainty—secured under the convention. It is not improbable that the Committee on Banking and Currency in the United States House will report shortly a bill permitting national banks to issue currency up to the par value of the bonds deposited by them with the government to secure their circulation. As is well known, the present law restricts their circulation to 90 per cent, of the bonds deposited

It is understood that the sub-committee to which the bill was referred in committee will make a favorable report to the full committee, and that the latter will make the first-named method of settlement is a strong report to the House, arging its adoption. There is, furthermore, good reason to believe, as we learn from the Baltimore American, "that Speaker Reed tavors the measure, and that the Rules Committee will accordingly name a day for consideration and a vote." In this event the bill will pass the House, and there is some ground for the hope that the bill will pass the Senate during the present session of Congress.

tical politics is shown in the composition of the Committee on Revaluation and Reassessment. He has given the Republicans a majority of the committee, without giving them the chairmanship, thus imposing the responsibility without the real authority. The gentlemen have excellent reputations, but we cannot excape the conviction that in this committee, which will, more than any other, determine the final form of the reassessment bill, President Bruce has planned a very skilful obstacle to the whole question of an equitable reassessment.
